More than just a home ~ A place in the community

Community integration begins with intentional variety, connectivity and welcomes diversity. These presentations explore the critical role physical environment plays in supporting people with intellectual/developmental disability to live more independent, safe and satisfying lives in their own homes on their own terms. George Braddock will share the values that guide his work using examples of successful strategies for planning, design and construction of person-centered houses and apartments.

Open forum on housing development in your community

George will be joined by Chris Turley of Transformative Spaces to answer your questions around overcoming and optimizing specific community and housing issues.

In his 30 years as a licensed general contractor and housing consultant, George has been involved in more than 1,500 projects for people with I/DD. He lectures, presents workshops and consults with families, provider agencies, faith-based, for-profit and not-for-profit housing organizations and governments. He trains and advocates for increasing awareness of the critical role of the physical environment in shifting the balance towards choice, control, and participation in an individual's home. Chris is a licensed architect in multiple states and has been working on residential, accessibility, medical, and other projects for three decades. He has worked with many families on creating homes and environments that not only offer traditional requirements but go further to, as he puts it, "provide an enriching shelter for the souls of all who use the space."
